Told through the eyes of seven students, it's about one year in the life of the fifth grade and their new teacher at the fictional Snow Hill school. As the school year opens, the fifth grade of Snow Hill School in Connecticut meets a new teacher, Mr. Terupt. Their reactions to it can vary. Peter, a class cut, tries to see what he can get away with and is impressed when Mr. Terupt is cool about correcting his behavior. Jessica, who has just moved from California, appreciates the way he treats her, as he is also new, and Anna, who is trying to stay in the background, likes the way he subtly draws her into the discussion class. Luke is the most diligent, so he appreciates the creative class of projects Mr. Terupt is developing, while the more sullen Jeffrey just hopes to be ignored. Alexia is too concerned with the manipulation of other girls to pay much attention to the new teacher, and Danielle is too worried that she is manipulated by Alexia. After a while, all the students warm up Mr. Terupt, which has a way of bringing everyone in and making them want to do better. He even gives them a day party as a reward to achieve certain goals and gets Mrs. Williams, chief, to agree to let the class go outside to play in the snow on their reward day. When the roughhousing game goes too far, Mr. Terupt is hit with an icy snowball and fell into a coma, having previously endured a series of concussions as a high school and college wrestler. The accident has a huge impact on all students who are worried about the role they have played; however, it soon becomes apparent that the teacher's influence on them continues even when he is unable to interact with them. Jeffrey, who has long felt guilty because his stem cells and bone marrow donations failed to save his brother's life, finally reaches out to his grieving parents and tries to raise his family again. Alexia comes to terms with events that have forced her to lie to manipulate and control others and learns to be a true friend, and Peter learns that students with learning disabilities are sometimes wiser than in regular school classes. As the school year draws to a close, students reflect on how they have benefited from Mr. Terupt's influence and are thrilled when he arrives at the school on the final day, and the principal announces that he will be their teacher again in sixth grade.
